Q. What is an AAF District 3 AES sponsor?

AES is the acronym for Advertising Education Sponsor. AAF District 3 includes American Advertising Federation clubs in Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. Member sponsors are committed to financially assisting the district in maintaining a high level of support to AAF College Chapters, AAF National Student Advertising Competition (NSAC) teams, and advertising students in general.

Dues from professional AAF clubs cannot adequately support all of the education programs. Most schools are cutting their budgets to the bone.

Q. Who are AES members?

Most are individuals and businesses who have found success in the advertising business – agencies, advertisers, media, and suppliers.

Q. Must I be an AAF Club member to be an AES member?

No. Anyone who loves the advertising business and wishes to assist deserving students through AAF student advertising programs can join.

Q. How do I become an AES member?

It's easy. Fill out the form on the right and send a check.

What students say about AAF programs

"Participating in the NSAC competition taught me more about understanding advertising than any extra advertising books I read, classes I took, or projects I completed. The demands, critiques, competition and tough questions asked cultivated the skills I needed to be a successful advertising professional and prepared me for the real demands of my career. I consider the lessons I learned by organizing an actual advertising campaign and presenting that campaign to experienced judges the capstone of my entire academic career."

AAF's National Student Advertising Competition (NSAC) is the premier college advertising competition. It provides more than 3,000 college students with "real-world" experience by requiring a strategic advertising/marketing/media campaign for a corporate sponsor. Sixteen schools nationwide, representing each AAF district, are selected to present their campaigns to a panel of industry judges at the AAF National Conference.

In 2011, nine schools competed in the AAF District 3 competition. The University of Virginia represented District 3 at the AAF National Conference in San Diego.

AAF's college-chapter program has 225 affiliated chapters throughout the United States and abroad. The program includes 6,800 undergraduate student members and more than 350 faculty advisers.

AAF provides numerous programs to guide its college students through advertising curriculum and job placement, including:

- More than 1,000 internship opportunities
- Scholarships
- Career guides
- Industry mentors
- Networking with top agency and corporate recruiters
